While many would have predicted that the disruptive nature of the internet might have meant the end of libraries, they have thrived over the last decade. They serve a community need which has driven the construction of many new ones as well as the renovation of older ones. Borden Lighting is proud to have collaborated on the many library projects shown here. Many of these projects illustrate the trend to individual control and the provision of power for computers. Where projects in the past usually included data ports, they have been eliminated by wifi.

All the projects involve careful coordination with the design team and the furniture makers. The libraries shown here include new, refurbished, replicated and re-created fixtures. They feature painted finishes, hand finished brass, bronze and aluminum. All energy efficient sources.
